I recall a thread a while back on the 563 trail and had it in mind when I visited the UO Map library last week. I can report on the location as can be seen in this snippet from the 1963 MHNF map.

My visit was very productive and I have enough lost trails to visit that I should be busy for the next several years tracking them down or until my arthritis keeps me on the couch. The inventory of the maps I imaged is in this thread at PortlandHikers.org. I'm loading all this to Flickr - I have over 1000 photos in 4GB to process so it will take a couple of weeks to get it all up there. So far I've done the 1963 MHFS map - some of the originals are rotated 90-180 degrees - some sort of Flickr thing I haven't figured out yet.

I hope to image the entire collection of the Mt Hood Forest Service maps to compare trail changes from one printing to the next. As with the maps themselves, all images I've taken of the maps are in the Public Domain.

It amazes me how many roads were built between these maps and now. It doesn't even look like road 46 was a through route in 1963! Not to mention all the small secondary roads that are there today.

Thanks for posting them. I hope they stay for a while, because I love looking at old maps and seeing how things change.

They should be around for at least a year as that's how long my Flickr subscription will last.

I've uploaded a couple more maps, one for 1966 where a lot of the trails on the 1963 map vanish. Interesting...

Here's the link to the collection of maps I'm uploading.
